Borra Vineyards Daring to be different in Lodi California

By Jenna Francisco

Those in the know about California wine country have had their eyes on Lodi lately. Actually, Lodi used to be known as a wine factory of sorts where huge quantities of grapes were grown and sourced to wineries outside the region. Over the past 15 years or so, local wine growers have begun a winemaking revolution, using their collective history that stretches back to the 19th century and their natural wine growing strengths to produce "ultra-premium wines."
